Asian Stocks Mixed After Post-Fed Rally in U.S.

Asian stocks were mixed Thursday following a rally in U.S. equities spurred by speculation that Federal Reserve policy tightening will help fight inflation without derailing economic growth. Japan gained aided by a weaker yen but Hong Kong slid and China fluctuated as traders weighed worries about U.S. sanctions on Chinese firms. S&P 500 and Nasdaq 100 contracts wavered after technology shares powered Wall Street to a strong close, overcoming initial declines following the Fed statement. The U.S. central bank said it will double the pace at which it tapers bond purchases to $30 billion a month and projected three quarter-point interest-rate increases in 2022, another three in 2023 and two more in 2024. It also flagged economic risks from the omicron virus strain. A gauge of the dollar trimmed a drop and Treasury yields were steady. Oil climbed and gold ticked up. In Australia, bond yields and the local currency pushed higher after strong jobs data.

Oil Rises on Hawkish Fed and as U.S. Demand Withstands Omicron

Oil rose after U.S. crude stockpiles fell the most since September and a more hawkish Federal Reserve spurred a broader rally in financial markets on speculation it can slow inflation without derailing growth. Futures in New York climbed as much as 1.4% after recovering from omicron concern in the previous session to close slightly higher. The S&P 500 settled near an all-time high Wednesday after Fed officials intensified their battle against the hottest inflation in a generation by moving to end their asset-buying program earlier than anticipated.

New Zealand Provisionally Approves Pfizer Vaccine for Ages 5-11

New Zealand's medicines regulator has provisionally approved the use of the Pfizer Covid-19 vaccine for children aged five to 11. The provisional approval is for two doses of the pediatric vaccine given at least 21 days apart, Medsafe said in a statement Thursday in Wellington. It is an adapted version of the vaccine used for people aged 12 and older, it said. New Zealand's government said earlier Thursday that 90% of people aged 12 and over are now fully vaccinated. Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern has said ministers were waiting on Medsafe approval before making any decision on vaccinating younger children. Work is already underway to prepare for the rollout of the pediatric vaccine, the Ministry of Health said. If approved by Cabinet, the rollout is expected to start no later than the end of January 2022.

Apple Delays Office Return; Germany Rations Shots

The U.K. reported the most new daily coronavirus cases since the pandemic began as the omicron variant spreads. England expects hospitalizations to surge over the holiday period. Apple Inc. is delaying its return to office to a "date yet to be determined." Germany is rationing vaccines amid a surprise shortage of shots. A European official said omicron will likely be the dominant strain there by mid-January. U.S. Secretary of State Antony Blinken scrapped the rest of his tour of Southeast Asia after a member of the press traveling with him tested positive. Princeton University moved final exams online after the school saw an increase in cases among undergraduates during the last 24 hours, including suspected cases of omicron.
