Stocks, U.S. Futures Waver Amid Fed, China Worries

Asian stocks and U.S. equity futures struggled to make headway Friday as the Federal Reserve's plan for aggressive policy tightening and China's Covid lockdowns hung over markets. Shares fell in Japan and fluctuated in Hong Kong and China, while S&P 500 and Nasdaq 100 contracts were steady. Global equities are nursing losses for the week, hurt by the risk of an economic downturn as the Fed tackles inflation. Treasury yields retreated and the bond curve held the steepness it gained in the wake of the Fed minutes Wednesday, which outlined plans to pare the central bank's balance sheet by more than $1 trillion a year. A dollar gauge was in sight of its highest level since 2020. Oil mostly held recent losses incurred on plans to release millions of barrels of crude from strategic reserves and China's demand-sapping virus outbreak.

Oil Sheds Bulk of Invasion-Driven Gains on SPR Sales, Virus, Fed

Oil headed for a back-to-back weekly retreat on plans for massive stockpile releases, a demand-sapping virus outbreak in top importer China and a hawkish turn from the U.S. Federal Reserve. West Texas Intermediate traded near $96 a barrel, with prices about 3% lower this week. The recent drop means the U.S. benchmark has now lost most of the gains seen since Russia's invasion of Ukraine began in late February.

A Key Russian Oil Grade Sells Out as Asia Snaps Up Barrels

Cargoes of Russian Sokol crude from the Far East have sold out for next month in a sign that shipments from the nation continue to find buyers despite Moscow facing more sanctions for its war in Ukraine. May-loading cargoes from the Sakhalin-I project will be delivered to buyers in Japan, South Korea, China and India on a spot or term basis, said traders who asked not to be named because the information is private. Sokol yields a lot of diesel, and it can be shipped to nations in north Asia within a week. Russian oil is still finding its way to willing buyers that either can't resist the temptation of cheaper crude, or are struggling to find replacement barrels as many others seek alternatives to the OPEC+ producer's supplies. The U.S. and its allies are planning a massive release of strategic reserves to soften the economic fallout of Russia's war in Ukraine, which is in its second month.

EU Bans Russian Coal Imports in First Energy Hit

European Union countries agreed to ban coal imports from Russia, the first time the bloc's sanctions have targeted Moscow's crucial energy revenues. U.S. officials warned the war in Ukraine may last for weeks or even years, as Kyiv's foreign minister pleaded for urgent military assistance while it can still make a difference. The United Nations General Assembly voted to suspend Russia from the Human Rights Council, the first country to be kicked off since Libya in 2011, though many countries abstained.
